THE PITTSBURGH TRAGEDY.

Funerals of the Victims.—Continuation of the Testimony Before the Coroner.
PITTSBURGH, May 30.—On every hand to-day one is reminded of the recent sad calamity at West Pittston. Business is entirely suspended, all has stores being closed. Flags draped in mourning float from a number of buildings. The funeral rites over the bodies of eight of the victims, principally Welshmen, took place at West Pittston. Seats and a speaker's stand were erected beneath the shade of an orchard near and in sight of the scene of disaster, and by 10:30 this morning two or three thousand persons had assembled to show their respect to the dead.

The bodies, all of which were in neat walnut coffins, were placed in front of the stand in the following order:—John H. Burroughs, aged 21 years; Evan Davis, aged 32; Benjamin Jones, aged 36; David Edwards, aged 30; John Lloyd, aged 27; A. L. Sualcombe, aged 56; Peter Davis, aged 23, and Thomas Prosser. Edwards, Lloyd, Jones, Sualcombe, and Davis leave families; the others were single.

The bodies were brought to the ground, followed by their friends, scarcely a dry eye could be seen, while the sobs and exclamations of bereaved wives and children, brothers and sisters, saddened the scene. Surrounding the stand were large numbers of representatives of the W. B. A. from over fifteen branches, Sons of Temperance, Good Templars, and the Brotherhood of St. James, a Welsh society.

The inquest was resumed to-day. Drs. Gorman and Nugent, physicians in attendance after the accident, testified that the miners visited by them died from foul air and the effects of carbonic acid gas.

S. H. Browne, the agent of the lessees of the mine, was sworn, and testified as follows: I was at the mine on Wednesday last, when Mr. Williams, the Mine Inspector, entered the mine; I did not go in myself, but saw the inspector when he came out, and he appeared to be perfectly satisfied with the condition of the mine, and said nothing about too many men being at work or anything contrary to law; I asked Williams if Kendrick, the superintendent of the mine, was doing well, and whether he was competent, and he, Williams, replied yes; when I took charge of the works, in January, I instructed Mr. Kendrick to have everything put in good order, and I also ordered a large fan put up, but the work had not been completed; I also gave Mr. Kendrick a copy of the ventilation bill for his guide; the members of the coal company are Messrs. Blake, White, Seward, and Hoyt, and they leased the mine for five years from the Luzerne Coal and Iron Company; the company have expended, in the purchase and improvements, about six thousand dollars. The breaker was not insured, and the loss, the witness thought, would fall upon the lessor, though the other side thought differently.

James McDermott, the engineer of the mine, was sworn, and testified as follows: I was on Saturday that I was running too fast, nor did he come to me. Mr. Reese on several occasions complained about speed being too great for his work, and the engines were slowed to please him; the engine was calculated to run from 68 to 70 revolutions per minute to do the work; I was ordered to keep up this speed; the fan always made just double the revolution of the engine; the fan was 7 feet in diameter, and the journals 1/2 inches; there was a talk one day of increasing the speed of the engines to one hundred revolutions per minute, by putting a larger wheel on the crank shaft, so as to run the fan faster, and thus get more air in the mine; this alteration was to have been made on Monday; I tried the engine on Saturday, about 1 o'clock, up to speed of nearly one hundred revolutions, or at least ninety; I ran the engine at this speed about ten minutes; it was Mr. Gorman's business to oil the journals under my directions; the journals ought to be oiled every three hours, but have known them to run in winter six hours; they require oiling often in hot weather, but they ought to run three hours in the warmest day; the inside journal was oiled through a tube four feet long and a quarter inch bore; the shaft ran on metal bearings; the outside of the fan was nine feet; the wings were also nine feet; Mr. Kendrick, the superintendent of the mine, was recalled.—When I returned from the bottom of the shaft with the mine inspector I stayed a few moments, then I walked towards the office; Mr. Williams said, "You seem to have quite a number of men down there; I counted fifteen in the shifting shaft while I stood in the door, and I found men working in the east gangway, and there were men in the west gangway." I (witness) replied, "I run the engine at this speed, and I am probably working rather more than the legal number. Mr. Williams then said, 'You may go on for ninety years without an accident, but if one did happen you will have to look out for consequences.' Mr. Williams did not tell me to take out any of the men. Mr. Williams could have easily ascertained how many men were at work. Inspector Williams never gave me any official instructions as to the number of men to be employed. I came to this country since the ventilating act was passed. I understand we can employ as many men as we please, if the Inspector does not object. I was a mining engineer in the old country, and served a regular apprenticeship. The jury are expected to give their verdict to-night.
